Utah adjusts to new area code

STEVE HALL
Universe Staff Writer

The "435" area code is now in use by both residential and business customers. In the implementation of the new area code, this six-digit dialing period is allowed customers time to adjust to the area code change on Sept. 22, 1998. Until then, customers can dial either the new or old area code.

modems all contributed to the area code addition.

The only areas in the state not affected by the change are Weber, Morgan, Davis and Salt Lake Counties. Most of Utah County and some of Box Elder, Tooele and Wasatch Counties are affected. Most of the state, including Utah County's "433" and "870" prefixes have adopted the "435" area code.

Dialing the "435" area code has been a problem for some people calling from BYU campus. Monday, 10 random calls with the new area code were placed to Logan businesses. None of the calls connected successfully.

Director of Telecommunication Services at BYU, Ferrell Mallory, said that because the change isn't mandatory until March, other priorities have taken precedent.

"The (area code) has not been implemented on our telephone system here at BYU," Mallory said. "The implementation of Extended Area Calling to Heber City at no cost for the long distance call was a higher priority for my staff than implementing the '435' area code. The new area code should be operational within the next couple of days."

Businesses are also experiencing problems with the new area code.

Leanna Cottrell, manager of Omniserve Cellular in Logan, said that although the change doesn't go into effect until March, the new area code is affecting some cellular customers now.

"If our customers have voice mail and their phones are not programmed with '435' as their area code, they are not able to retrieve their voice mail," she said. "I have only had one case so far, but I know of others in our other stores."

However, not all cellular customers need worry about the area code change. "Voice Stream's phones are automatically switched to the new area code," Cottrell said. "But all cellular customers should check with their provider to make sure their phones are programmed correctly."

US West has anticipated some problems customers may experience. On their Internet website, <http://www.uswest.com>, they suggest completing the following steps before the March 22, 1998 deadline:

1. Notify customers, clients and others who call you that you have a new area code.
2. Change your area code on all printed material such as personal stationary, checks, business cards, brochures, signs and catalogues.
3. Reprogram any automatic-dial or speed-dial numbers.
4. Call the test number, (435) 792-0049, to determine if your telephone equipment recognizes the new area code.
5. Contact your telephone system vendor or consultant to determine if your system needs to be reprogrammed or upgraded.

The website also states that all costs incurred for updating equipment and revising printed material are the responsibility of the individual customer.

"I don't foresee a money problem with the new area code," Cottrell said. "We go through business cards so quickly, printing some with the new number won't cost us anything extra. Our customers won't pay anything either," she said. "All our reprogramming is free."

But while many businesses may be able to use supplies with the old area code, Kurtis Larson, owner of Cameo Florist in St. George, said extra costs for him are inevitable.

"It'll cost extra. You have to be up on it — causes less confusion," he said. "When you have four locations and do business worldwide, expense is part of it."

But although it will cost his business to adapt, Larson said the change is necessary.

"I think it's a wise move," Larson said. "With growth, you have to do it."

As a direct result of the new area code, 10-digit dialing may become necessary for local phone calls in some areas. Customers affected by this dialing change will be notified in advance by their local telephone provider.

Customers not sure whether to dial a seven- or 10-digit phone number, can make any local call using all ten digits. Questions regarding any difficulties can be directed to US West's Customer Service Center at 1-800-441-5516.

New area codes are chosen by the Numbering Plan Administrators for the U.S. telecommunications industry and are assigned well before existing prefixes are in danger of running out.

Gender wage gap widens after decline

By ROMAN HILDEBRANDT
Universe Staff Writer

After 20 years of decline, the wage gap between genders is widening.

Across the nation and at BYU, women and men's groups are concerned about this new information and what the figures will mean.

According to a report from the Bureau of Labor Statistics, the weekly earnings of full-time women average 75 percent of men's average earnings. The concern is that four years ago the number was at 77 percent. The drop has not been officially accounted for and may take several years to fully understand, but experts have speculated on some of the reasons.

"It's a lot related to the new welfare focus. Basically, you're sending women out to get very low paying jobs," said Marie Cornwall, BYU professor of sociology.

She also said the recent welfare reform hit single, uneducated mothers and children the hardest. Without government assistance these women are forced into menial jobs.

"It's the flood of women into the market," Cornwall said.

"I've been wanting to point out to the world that it was happening, but I didn't know why," said Jared Bernstein, economist with the Economic Policy Institute as reported in The Wall Street Journal Tuesday.

"In the early 1970s there was real impetus to make sure women had equal opportunity in the labor market. Attitudes did change and we saw change, but initial change is more rapid than later change," said Michael R. Ransom, BYU professor of economics.

In The Wall Street Journal article, Harvard University economist, Claudia Goldin also pointed to a plateau effect to explain the wage gap.

"The social movements that led to women's advances came in with great force. It was an enormous tide. Now we're coming into new equilibrium," Goldin said.

The widening gap should not affect BYU women graduates as much.

"For men and women out of college, their beginning pay is fairly equal," Cornwall said.

But later on in life these graduates may experience the wage gap to a greater extent.

"Sometimes (the gap) is a function of women moving in and out of the labor force," Cornwall said.

Women who choose to leave work to have children or for other reasons will have less experience which may lead to lower wages and a wider gap in earnings.

Lawsuits land millions from American Airlines

Associated Press

CHICAGO — American Airlines and seven other companies agreed Monday to pay $110 million to settle lawsuits filed by relatives of some of the 68 people killed when an American Eagle plane plunged into an Indiana field.

"We are terribly sorry that this happened," airline attorney Anton Valukas told relatives. "We can never compensate you for the loss that you have suffered."

The agreement, which was announced moments before opening statements were to begin, settled 26 lawsuits covering the death of 27 passengers and crew members aboard American Eagle flight 4184.

The French-built ATR-72 turbo-prop, flying from Indianapolis to Chicago, was in a holding pattern in a freezing rain on the evening of Oct. 31, 1994, when it suddenly rolled and plunged to the ground near Roselawn, Ind. All aboard were killed.

The National Transportation Safety Board determined that the plane had developed ice on its wings and urged tighter regulations on flights by commuter aircraft in icing conditions.

The NTSB said the flight's crew was not responsible.

Monday's settlement covers the deaths of 27 people. Two other lawsuits are still being negotiated.

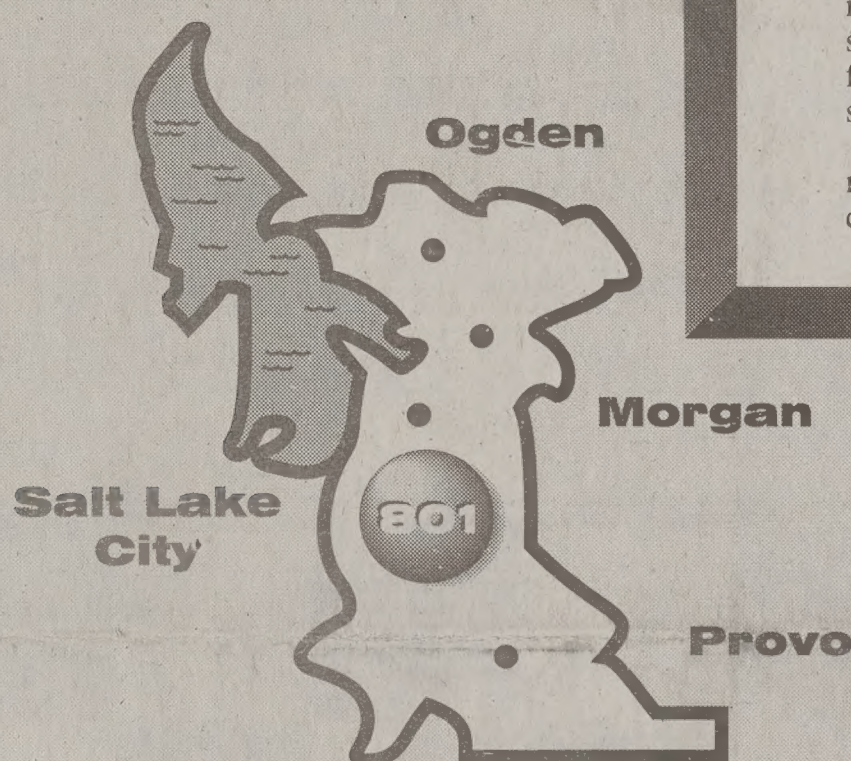

Also Monday, attorneys for both sides disclosed that settlements already have been paid to relatives of the 35 remaining victims. The terms were not released.

Relatives of those who died in the crash said Monday's settlement was fair.

But they said nothing could erase the emotional pain they have suffered.

"This was a sad day — it brought all that back," said Kim Collins, 36, of Pittsburgh, whose sister, flight attendant Sandi Modaff, died in the crash.

"I can look at my life before the crash and after the crash and it will never be the same," said Terry Severin, 21, of Glenview, Ill., whose sister and nephew were killed.

Air Force grounds pilots, evaluates procedures

CHRIS ONSTOTT
Universe Staff Writer

Defense Secretary William Perry grounded all Air Force training flights Monday to evaluate safety after an alarming number of accidents.

The grounding, which grounded about 10,000 combat aircraft and about 100,000 Air Force personnel, including the 388th fighter wing at Air Force Base, required all of the military take a day this week to evaluate procedures.

At Command Commander Fred E. Hawley said the Air Force would take the stand-down as a reaction to the B-1 fighter crash on Friday in Montana. Hawley said the stand-down would have more meaning and would take it more seriously. "It should be directly linked to the accident," said Col. Ronald Smith, director of public affairs for the Air Force Command of the U.S. Air Force.

ing. Rand also said some necessary flights, such as those conducted to enforce no-fly zones, will carry on as scheduled.

"We are trying to focus on safety from a ground level," Rand said. "We are trying to put the focus of these discussions in examining the risks that they deal with and finding ways to mitigate those risks."

Although the six accidents last week were unheard of in the military, the accidents were rather typical, Rand said.

"I can't remember when we had a string of accidents like that," Rand said. "But it was typical in that each accident was different in nature."

For some reason accidents tend to occur in clusters. According to Col. Maurice L. Stocks, formerly the director of personnel for the air combat command for the U.S. Air Force, and current professor of aerospace studies and commander of Air Force ROTC detachment 855 at BYU, it is important to put the accidents in proper perspective.

"Although the recent series of accidents is unfortunate, our overall accident rate is as low or lower than it has been in previous years," Stocks said.

U.S. senators' hearts burn for 'Elvira'

BRANSON, Mo. — Joe Bonsall of the Oak Ridge Boys didn't know what to make of what he was seeing on CNN: four U.S. senators singing — in four-part harmony, no less — his group's signature song, "Elvira."

Soon, he and the other Oak Ridge Boys were on the phone to one another, saying, in effect, "You gotta see this."

Soon enough they were in Washington, invited by the Singing Senators — Majority Leader Trent Lott of Miss. and fellow Republicans John Ashcroft of Mo., Larry Craig of Idaho and James Jeffords of Vt.

Sure, there was the Capitol tour, but there was also a little harmonizing to be done in the Rotunda. On Sunday in Branson, Bonsall and fellow Oaks Duane Allen, Richard Sterban and William Lee Golden (he of the distinctive flowing hair and beard) returned the favor.

The senators, on a fund-raising trip, decided to take a day off and visit Branson. When the Oak Ridge Boys heard about it, they made arrangements to bring them on stage at the Charley Pride Theater. Backstage beforehand, as Senate wives snapped pictures and musicians exchanged hugs, it was hard to tell who was more awed.

Millionaire oilman invests in Clinton

WASHINGTON — Contributing $300,000 to the Democratic Party so he could socialize with President Clinton was worth it to millionaire oilman Roger Tamraz, who said the donation made oil industry executives view him as a major player.

In testimony before the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee last week, the oilman and international fugitive said his donation to the Democratic Party gained him entry to the White House over the objections of Clinton's national-security aides.

The Caspian Sea pipeline project he was promoting was never built but the Lebanese-born businessman insisted the important thing was getting his foot in the door.

Tamraz spoke of two brief encounters with Clinton at the White House. One was at a March 1996 dinner in which he asked the president to support his project and the second in June that year when he spent three hours at the White House.

Sunken presidential yacht discovered

ASSATEAGUE ISLAND, Va. — Salvage operator Ben Benson was searching for sunken Spanish treasure ships in the shallow waters off Assateague Island when he found a piece of American history.

Using a magnetometer, Benson discovered the Despatch, the yacht of presidents Rutherford Hayes, James Garfield, Chester Arthur, Grover Cleveland and Benjamin Harrison that sank more than a century ago.

The yacht, built in 1873, ran aground in stormy weather off Assateague in 1891 and was ripped to pieces by waves. Everyone in the crew survived. News accounts of the day pinpointed the yacht's location, but there had been no effort to recover it.

"I think we're going to find some really interesting artifacts, perhaps gifts from heads of state, a compass, a steering wheel," said Benson, president and owner of Sea Hunt Inc. "I'm not seeing scattered pieces. It's lying largely in one mass."

Island couple stays, despite deadline

GUIANA ISLAND, Antigua — A Welsh couple who have been the sole residents of this island for 32 years stayed put Monday, three days after a deadline to accept a $500,000 government settlement to move and make way for a resort.

Thomas "Taffy" Bufton and Lorna Eileen "Bonny" Bufton had until Friday to accept the settlement. As of Sunday, however, nobody had shown up to evict them.

The couple originally farmed the island, a 460-acre speck just off the coast of Antigua, for a London lawyer. In recent years they have looked after the European fallow deer, the national animal of Antigua.

The government has other plans for Guiana Island. Malaysian businessman Dato Tan Kay Hock plans to build a resort on Guiana and eight other small islands. The Buftons, both more than 70 years old, said the resort will kill off the wildlife on the island. "We won't move until we are forcibly moved," Thomas said.

U.S. debt, nuclear testing focus of Clinton address

By KHIRSTIN WHITE
Universe Staff Writer

President Bill Clinton addressed nuclear testing and the U.S. debt with the U.N. Security Council Monday.

He defined the United Nation's first task as the pursuit of peace and security. The second task is "to defend and extend universal human rights and to help democracy's remarkable gains endure," Clinton said.

Clinton announced that he was sending the Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty before Congress for ratification Monday in conjunction with the U.N. campaign for increased peace. The treaty had been signed by 146 U.N. leaders a year previous to this year's conference and calls for a commitment to end nuclear weapons testing forever.

Clinton said the treaty was "the longest-sought, hardest-fought prize in the history of arms control. It will help to prevent the nuclear powers from developing more advanced and more dangerous weapons. It will limit the possibilities for other states to acquire such devices."

"Clinton has been trying to build support for the treaty ratification. There has been a timing issue involved," said Cory Leonard, director of student programs and instructor of the BYU Model United Nations. "When he introduced it to Congress he knew he would need support and that he would be fighting against Republicans who will say that there is a need for some kind of nuclear testing. There will be a kind of Cold War battle in Congress."

Other nations present waited to hear what President Clinton would say about the $1.5 billion debt the United States has in past dues and debts. He assured the assembly that the United States was in the process of paying back the debt.

"This year, for the first time since I have been president, we have an opportunity to put the question of debts and dues behind us once and for all, and to put the United Nations on sounder financial footing for the future," he said.

Clinton commended Ted Turner for exemplifying the visionary American after Turner donated $1 billion to the United Nations to enhance its humanitarian efforts and to help in the overall development of the United Nations.

"His gesture highlights the potential for partnership between the U.N. and the private sector in contributions of time, resources and expertise," Clinton said.

Leonard was not impressed with how Clinton glossed over the debt issue concerning nations at the assembly.

"The United State's credibility is on the line. Clinton is in a tough position but he very carefully dodged the issue that all American representatives worried about," he said.

Groups call for draining Lake Powell

By ELISA BALL
Universe Staff Writer

Lake Powell — the nation's second largest man-made lake, which provides a wealth of recreation, water and power to millions in the Southwest — could soon be nothing but an empty canyon.

Government and industry officials call the idea ridiculous, while environmentalists say it makes perfect sense to drain the lake. Both sides will gather in Washington today for a hearing to voice their opinions.

The Sierra Club, the Glen Canyon Institute of Utah and other environmental groups seek a more aggressive campaign to win the public support.

"This has been a goal of environmentalists ever since the dam was built," said Marie Dunn, a Sierra Club representative. "There will be a long road to travel before action will take place, but we are excited that Congress is finally willing to listen."

Environmentalists believe future generations deserve to see the original Glen Canyon. "A crown jewel of American Heritage environment is currently sitting under water," Dunn said.

Verna Stoddard, from Page, Ariz., and a member of Friends of Lake Powell, thinks it is a waste of taxpayers' dollars to drain the lake.

"It is a stupid, idiotic idea from a naive Sierra Club member who has no idea what draining Powell would do to millions of people, economies, and natural habitats," said Stoddard. "It is impossible to reclaim Glen Canyon, so why not enjoy what we have now?"

The Glen Canyon Dam generates enough power to supply over 750,000 homes with electricity. The lake is also a main supplier of drinking water for Phoenix, Los Angeles, Salt Lake City, Denver and Albuquerque.

The entertainment trade off is the previous 190 miles of hikers' paradise versus the present lake that entertains touring, water skiing, fishing, camping and boating enthusiasts.

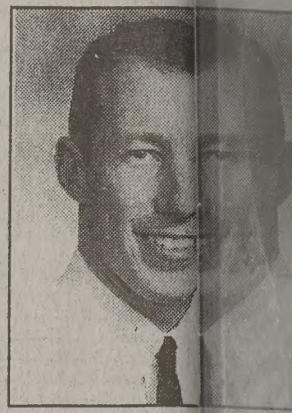

"There is nothing like being with your family and friends in one of Lake Powell's coves skiing on glass all day long," said William Farrar, a senior from Marietta, Ga., studying business management. "Not only is the water skiing irresistible — the scenery is nothing like any other lake I've been."

"Those who enjoy Powell for its scenery and recreation need not worry; if they actually did decide to drain this lake the idea would sit in courts for years," Stoddard said.

Brochure guides Escalante visitors

By ELISA BALL
Universe Staff Writer

The U.S. Bureau of Land Management has printed a new brochure for the Grand Staircase-Escalante National Monument.

A year ago Sept. 18, President Clinton designated the red rock country of southern Utah a national monument. Once threatened by coal mining, the land is now protected and open for tourists.

Utah's population growth attracts thousands of tourists every year to the canyons, rock forms, wildlife and plant life that the Grand Staircase offers.

The brochure is the first of its kind developed by the BLM, which manages the 1.7 million acres of primitive land. The new brochure will detail the national monument with color photos, narrations and a fold-out map. The two-sided brochure is free of charge to the public and is available at the BLM's Salt Lake City, Cedar City, Escalante and Kanab offices.

"For the person who wants to be introduced to the monument, its scientific value and basic recreation information with an aerial view of what the landscape looks like, this map does it," said BLM spokesman

Don Banks in the Salt Lake Tribune Sept. 17.

Chris Short, a senior, from Mesa, Ariz., studying pre-med, is an outdoors enthusiast who has visited southern Utah's national parks frequently in the last year.

"A free brochure will be very beneficial to anyone interested in exploring the monument. Many of the locals currently give cheap, uninformative and unprofessional maps," Short said.

Scott Hansen, a senior, from Johnsboro, Tenn., majoring in international relations, said many other students at BYU have taken advantage of this recreational paradise which offers hiking, backpacking, fishing, camping, horseback riding and mountain biking.

"Not only were we able to camp and hike, we found some historic, hieroglyphic Indian drawings," he said.

Although the new brochure is informative, preparation is necessary when exploring this remote, primitive territory.

When planning a trip to the Staircase, maps, water, sun screen, first-aid kits, and proper clothing are recommended.

Hansen said that while he was touring the area he had never experienced such extremes in the weather.

"One minute the sun was shining and a few hours later I had never been so cold," he said.

Visitors are encouraged to contact the Information Office in Escalante at (801) 826-4291 to get updated weather reports, road conditions, maps and hiking information.

Thursday to remind President Clinton of last year's promise to give equitable land back to the Utah School Trust, replacing the 175,000 acres that were locked up when President Clinton formed the Grand Staircase-Escalante Monument.

President Clinton promised a year ago that "creating (the) national monument should not and (would) not come at the expense of Utah's children." Yet up until Cannon's speech nothing had been said or done about the issue.

In addition to Cannon's speech, a letter by Cannon, Rep. Maurice Hinchey and 48 other congressmen asking for a working group to find equivalent land was submitted to the President. According to Cannon, this letter set down three stipulations for the search of land.

"It can't cost the School Trust for appraisals, it must be done on a large scale, and the process must be quick," Cannon said.

The stipulations were proposed to create fairness for the Utah School Trust.

U.S. space shuttle Atlantis to aid floundering Mir station

Associated Press

MOSCOW — Troubles arrived in threes Monday at the Mir space station, just three days before the U.S. space shuttle Atlantis is to be launched on a visit to the ailing station.

First, Mir's main computer failed for the third time in three weeks. That problem was followed by two new ones: the failure of a carbon dioxide removal system and the appearance of a mysterious leak of brown fluid.

Those on Mir — two Russians and American astronaut Michael Foale — were not in danger, space officials insisted, and, as planned, NASA began its countdown for Thursday's Atlantis launch.

"We would strongly dislike it if the shuttle launch is postponed, because it is to bring a new computer and other spare parts," said Viktor Blagov, deputy Russian Mission Control chief.

However, the docking will only be possible if Mir's capricious computer functions properly throughout the procedure — which is far from certain.

"It functions for one week, and then it gives us a surprise like it did this morning," Blagov said at a briefing. "It's difficult to forecast how the computer will behave in the future."

When the computer goes down — a problem the crew is accustomed to — so does the gyroscope system that keeps the space station in the right position for the docking. Loss of orientation also means Mir's solar panels lose the best angle to soak up energy from the sun, which can cause a power shortage.

As during the previous breakdowns, Foale and Russians Anatoly Solovyov and Pavel Vinogradov switched off the station's oxygen generator and most other systems to save power.

Early Monday, the crew saw a small, brown cloud outside the station. Blagov initially said it appeared to be a leak, perhaps fuel from one of dozens of thrusters on the station or some substance from the ruptured Spektr module, sealed off since a June 25 collision.

Later in the day, the crew watched more of the substance leak, and said it looked like a spray of oily drops.

Onboard equipment didn't indicate any fuel loss, so the substance may have been from an unused engine, Lyndin said.

And finally, the carbon dioxide removal system shut down Monday because of a fan breakdown. Blagov said the failure poses no danger, because the station has a large oxygen supply.

Incongruous review

Donald Wright
Department of Microbiology

Follow the reviewers' comments: "I thought the movie was terrific and incredibly funny. 'I agree. 'In and Out' was surprisingly entertaining." Surely these comments are not about the movie that they characterize as, "Makes fun of virtue and portrays promiscuity and homosexuality as being normal. In the end it says loud and clear that being gay is completely normal."

This is "terrific," "funny," "entertaining"?

Bad timing

Get a clue Duane! My question is, why does a monopoly need to advertise at all? I would be much happier with better service, lower rates and some respect for my intelligence and consumer savvy. If I had a choice, I wouldn't be a US West customer. The thought of seeing "US West" plastered all over everything having to do with the Olympics for the next five years and knowing that I helped to pay for it makes me sick to my stomach.

Property tax

Gene Faux
Springville

No one knows what the true value of a piece of property is until it is sold. Yet, the assessor sets an arbitrary value on older homes and then requires the owner to disprove the valuation.

If that would not work, certainly a formula could be devised that factored in average incomes, age and other variables that would keep homes of the poor from the auction block. Let's get creative.

Faulty logic

D. Loren Washburn
Salt Lake

Benson's assertion that "the key for the Palestinians is to learn to protest peacefully" assumes that Palestinians only know how to blow themselves and others up. Besides Hamas' terrorist tactics, other methods are being used by Palestinians to gain political freedom. Currently the Palestinian National Authority led by Yasser Arafat is desperately trying to form a viable peace plan for Palestine.

An overwhelming majority, 79 percent of Palestinians surveyed, support the peace talks. Apparently the suicide bombings don't reflect a general sentiment among Palestinians. Instead the peaceful demonstrations and peace talks led by the PNA have the support of most Palestinians.

In a recent survey conducted by a Palestinian group, only 9.6 percent of all Palestinians polled were affiliated with Hamas. Benson's "given" that most Hamas are Palestinians is fallacious as well. Hamas is a Sunni Muslim fundamentalist group and not specifically Palestinian. Hamas does not draw solely from Palestine for its membership, nor is it head-quartered in Palestine, and, according to Israeli government reports, the bombers were probably not even Palestinian.

Perhaps Mr. Benson's cultural and religious biases influenced his logic and clouded his judgment in his condemnation of the means used by the "Palestinians" to gain peace. That is unfortunate.

In order to be good Christians and citizens of the world, however, we must use the facts to form our opinions and avoid judgment, especially in areas where we lack knowledge.

Sipherd said he developed this class because of one student.

Design students were surveyed, and on one survey, a student wrote that his biggest disappointment was not having a class that integrated religion with profession, Sipherd said.

He also said it is important for students to have a class that allows them to "commit (their) talents to building the kingdom of God."

The class is not just geared toward visual arts majors. Sipherd said students from a variety of majors have taken this class, but the class size is limited.

Sipherd said the class involves reading, discussing and writing, with students evaluating their own efforts. The students' tests for the course are based solely on their own interpretations of their effort.

Patricia Barrett, a sophomore from Provo majoring in photography, is enrolled in the class. She said the students' self-evaluations give them freedom.

Another class that draws upon students' experiences is International Area Studies 353R, "International Outreach." This class attempts to help students combine their cross-cultural experiences with the theory they have learned in their respective majors.

Cory Leonard, director of student programs at the Kennedy Center and professor of IAS 353R, said the class is part extra-curricular and part academic. The class has been taught at BYU for 25 years and is two semesters long.

Leonard said half the students in the class are usually political science majors, with the other half majoring in anything from microbiology to English.

Students who plan to take this class must have either lived outside the United States for a minimum of three months, or be from a country outside of the United States.

Leonard said the class prepares students to be effective delegates, trained in public speaking, research, diplomacy and international relations.

Thomas Larsen, a senior from Sunnyvale, Calif., majoring in international relations, and Leonard's teaching assistant, said, "I think this class is a wonderful opportunity to use the things you've learned."

A major part of the class entails forming a model United Nations, with the goal of participating in a national model U.N. competition.

The students in IAS 353R also organize high school students into a similar model U.N. organization.

BYU students' actions affect life in Provo

By RAY HAMMOND
Universe Staff Writer

BYU students who are either arriving for the first time or returning to Provo may not be as aware of permanent residents as they should be.

Whether it be positive or negative, an increase of approximately 30,000 inhabitants can have a profound effect on life in any town.

One student/resident said her fellow students are indifferent to other Provo citizens.

"BYU students don't seem to care," said Malynda Harmston, a junior who has lived with her family in Provo for nine years.

Harmston said that driving conditions is the biggest inconvenience caused by so many students.

Congestion on the roads is a common concern for Provo residents. Sara Black, a sophomore majoring in music, agreed that driving is the biggest headache caused by the influx of residents.

Black was raised in Provo and said that there are just as many benefits to the start of the school year.

Black attended BYU during Summer Term when the atmosphere on and off campus was more relaxed.

"There's a lot more business in town and a lot more going on during the school year," she said.

James Jarvis, a junior majoring in marine biology, and his family have lived in Provo for two years. He said the Provo community offers benefits not to be outweighed by the traffic or crowds.

"Provo is a college town and not a retirement community," Jarvis said.

"Never will (BYU students) have the same opportunity to be surrounded by so many people with the same values and beliefs as we do here."

Bookstore renovations plow ahead

By BESS HARVEY
Universe Staff Writer

The BYU Bookstore is not exempt when it comes to major construction and renovations.

The BYU Bookstore is in a three-phase renovation and upgrading project.

Dennis Lindberg, assistant director of operations and training, said that construction is in the midst of the first phase.

Lindberg said phase one will be completed by the end of December if construction is on time. The construction is currently on schedule.

Phase one consists of renovations to the first floor of the Bookstore. When the first phase is complete, the health and beauty section will move to the first floor along with the music and photo center. The shipping department, and school and art supplies will also return to the first floor, Lindberg said.

The changes in the Wilkinson Center are taking place because the building needs to be updated mechanically and electrically.

"When you change the building you must also do seismic updating," Lindberg said.

Sheer walls have been added in some areas of the Bookstore as part of the seismic updating.

Lindberg also said there needs to be an upgrade because fixtures are getting old and need to be modified as departments change.

Bookstore employee, Jaime Kent said, "People are a little more impatient and a lot of people stop and ask for directions even with all of the signs."

Phase two of the construction will begin in February on the east portion of the bookstore. The east portion includes the men's, women's, gift and computer department.

"Those departments will move to the third floor and texts will be in the garden court," Lindberg said.

The phase two changes will place until August.

Phase three will be renovation of the general book area on the second floor.

All phases in the bookstore are expected to be completed by April 1999.

Dr. David B. Larson

President, National Institute of Healthcare Research

"The Forgotten Factor in Physical and Mental Health:
What Does the Research Show About Faith?"

Dr. David Larson, MD, MSPH, is president of the National Institute of Health Research, located in Rockville, Maryland. During the last 12 years he has worked as a senior researcher in the office of the director of the National Institutes of Health, the office of the secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services, and the Mental Health Services Branch of the National Institute of Mental Health.

His training includes a psychiatry residency, chief residency in psychiatry, and geriatric fellowship training at the Duke University Medical Center in Durham, North Carolina. Dr. Larson received a three-year epidemiology fellowship from the National Institutes of Health, during which he earned his MSPH in epidemiology from the School of Public Health at the University of North Carolina.

Dr. Larson is board certified in psychiatry, APA-certified in administrative psychiatry, and AAMFT-certified as a marriage and family therapist. He is a fellow of the American Psychiatric Association.

His innovative research achievements have led to many professional honors and awards. His research interests and publications have included the influence of religious commitment on physical and mental health status and care, the use of analytic systematic reviews in reviewing policy-relevant research, and the provision and delivery of mental health services in both the primary care and specialty mental health services sectors.

Drawing upon published research sources, Dr. Larson will review data concerning the extensive spirituality of the U.S. public—particularly during times of personal crisis, stress, or medical illness. He will also discuss how issues of spirituality have been inadequately handled by health care professionals and researchers. He will show that existing research on the health benefits of religion and spirituality is, indeed, scientifically credible.

Christian values inspire Southern singer

By MATT WEST
Universe Staff Writer

You may have heard of Julie Wiggins before, but if you haven't, it's definitely someone to become familiar with.

The local singer and songwriter will be performing Saturday at the South Fork Pavilion up Provo Canyon. The price of admission will be cans of food for the local Food and Shelter Coalition.

Wiggins will also sing on the main floor of the Wilkinson Center Wednesday at noon.

Wiggins is a regular at Mama's Cafe, but listeners may be more likely to find her singing and strumming her guitar with a group of friends.

"That's where the heart of it is, just being with people who can get out of (my music) what I'm trying to give them," Wiggins said.

Wiggins, who is originally from North Carolina, started learning to play the guitar from her dad at age 6.

"As a kid I was pretty much in my dad's tracks all the time," she said.

She started by copying her dad's country-western style and by covering Alabama tunes. Later she incorporated the bluegrass and gospel influences from her home town of Robbinsville.

In the past few years she has shifted toward a more folk-pop style of music. She says her influences are from such artists as Nancy Griffith, Dave Wilcox and Adam Duritz from the Counting Crows.

Wiggins moved to Provo a little more than two years ago and was baptized a member of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints a short while later.

Though her music is not Christian pop, her beliefs and feelings for the gospel are apparent tools in her song-writing.

"I'm a big believer that everybody that comes in contact with you and touches your life becomes a part of you. That's what my music is about," Wiggins said. "It encompasses so many people and so many experiences. It's my way of giving everything I've got to people in the hopes that somehow they can relate, feel better or benefit because of something I sing."

SETTING IT STRAIGHT: Ben Cahoon, shown after a reception in a game last year, addressed the topic of WAC respect Saturday. "We don't play for the WAC, we play for ourselves," Cahoon said.

BYU is too good for its conference

By PETER CHRISTENSEN
Daily Universe Editor

It's hard to believe that it's been almost a year since I last graced The Daily Universe as its beloved sports editor. While I hadn't planned on coming back (as editor-in-chief I am much too busy to be worrying about such trivial things as sports), my pen can simply rest no longer after what I saw and heard in Tempe Saturday night.

Kudos to Ben Cahoon. This guy deserves the Steel Man of the Century for his performance last week.

First his wife gives birth to the couple's first child — a 6-pound, 12-ounce girl named McKulle (I can appreciate these things now as I am expecting a baby boy in two months). Then he goes out and catches anything and everything Kevin Feterik throws his way in the most Kozlowski-esque performance I've seen in a long time. Cahoon's 218 receiving yards Saturday made him the Western Athletic Conference's top pass-catcher — ahead of Kevin Dyson, ahead of Hakim Az-zhir.

And as if that weren't enough, he utters one of the best sound bites I've ever heard from a BYU football player.

Does anyone know what I'm talking about? Was anyone listening to the Paul James variety show after the game? If you were, I hope you heard Cahoon's answer to yet another ridiculous question about what BYU's win meant to WAC football.

For those of you who missed it, Cahoon said simply: "We don't play for the WAC, we play for ourselves."

Thank you, thank you, thank you Ben Cahoon. Why is it that whenever BYU defeats a formidable non-conference opponent, the first thing everybody starts talking about is credibility and exposure for WAC football?

Allow me to tell you what BYU's win over Arizona

State did for WAC football. NOTHING. Why? Because the WAC is a horrible football conference. Always has been, always will be.

There, I said it. Now was that so bad?

Until the other 15 WAC teams start beating non-conference opponents on a regular basis, nothing BYU does will make the WAC a better football conference.

So why is it that Ben Cahoon and the rest of the BYU football team are not playing for the WAC, but all their fans are? Why do we all get so up-tight and defensive when the media don't give the WAC any respect. Does it deserve any?

I know BYU students that actually cheer for the University of Utah because, they say, "it's good for the WAC." Who cares! Would Michigan root for Ohio State because it's good for the Big 10? Would UCLA root for USC because it's good for the Pac-10? That would be ludicrous.

So why do we do it? Why do we care so much about the WAC's football reputation? What has the WAC ever done for BYU?

I'll tell you what the WAC has done for BYU football. The WAC has robbed BYU of millions of dollars by making it split its bowl earnings with the likes of UTEP, SMU and San Jose State.

WAC Commissioner Karl Benson whined all last year about how unfair it was that the WAC was not included in the Bowl Alliance. He even threatened to take legal action.

Just one question, Mr. Commissioner. How fair is it for the only WAC team that has ever garnered so much as a hint of national respect to have to split its bowl earnings with a bunch of second-rate football programs? Maybe BYU should sue the WAC. Better yet, maybe BYU should leave the WAC. What kind of a football conference would that be?

It's time to stop making excuses for and defending the WAC. BYU does not need the WAC. The WAC needs BYU.

Effort the key difference in upset over Sun Devils

By SCOTT BELL
Universe Sports Writer

The mood was decidedly upbeat around the BYU football offices Monday.

Players lounged in the offices before film meetings began, laughing and joking with each other. Coaches were even smiling. That's what a clutch win over a high-ranked opponent will do for you.

"That was a very big win for us, no question," said head coach LaVell Edwards. "The way we were able to win was very remarkable, playing so well defensively and passing up so many scoring opportunities. To be able to do that against a good team on the road, I'm very pleased with the way the players played."

In particular, the Cougars' running game and defense stood out. Arizona State only gained 245 total yards, compared to the 578 Washington rang up.

"I don't know if Washington was better than Arizona State as much as we played a lot better against Arizona State than we did against Washington," said defensive line coach Tom Ramage. "We played a lot more intense game. The guys have a lot of pride, and wanted to redeem themselves."

BYU's running attack ground out 99 yards after totalling just two against the Huskies, and the figure would have been much higher if not for seven sacks.

"We did a better job loosening up the running game by throwing more effectively," Edwards said. "We got it going and stayed with it. We've got a very fine running back in Brian McKenzie. He was injured early in the Washington game and wasn't around much, so having him around made a big difference."

At quarterback, BYU went in to the game with the same plan it did against Washington, according to Edwards. Kevin Feterik got the start, but Paul Shoemaker could have been inserted if the Cougars had been struggling.

"We had a plan in mind going into the Washington game, and obviously it didn't work out, so we made the change at halftime," Edwards said. "We went in to the Arizona State game the same as Washington, but things went well and Kevin (Feterik) was performing well, so we decided to go the route with him, and it worked very well."

Several big performances by Cougars landed them in the national rankings. Despite playing only two games, Ben Cahoon is 23rd in receiving yards, with 325. Feterik is eighth nationally in pass efficiency, with a rating of 164.59.

As a team, the Cougars are ranked sixth in passing yardage, averaging 317 yards a game.

Cornerbacks Jack Williams and Ben Cook were both injured against the Sun Devils, but both are likely to play this Saturday at SMU. Defensive tackle Harland Ah You is continuing to get back into playing shape. According to Ramage, he is still a way off from being in game shape.

Victories by BYU, Rice football teams head list of victories for WAC schools

Associated Press

Impressive non-conference victories by Brigham Young and Rice left their respective coaches gushing.

BYU sophomore Kevin Feterik, making his first career start, completed 17-of-30 for 328 yards despite being sacked five times. Ben Cahoon had eight catches for 219 yards.

BYU, which climbed to No. 23 in this week's Associated Press poll, opens conference play this week at SMU.

Rice (2-1) ground out 461 yards and Michael Perry scored three touchdowns to beat Northwestern. Perry rushed for 104 yards, including a 7-yard run with 1:24 left that proved to be the clincher, and quarterback Chad Nelson ran for 178 yards.

"I don't think I've ever been around an offense that has executed as flawlessly in the option game - and mainly with the pitches deep down the field," Rice coach Ken Hatfield said. "I thought Chad played as flawlessly at quarterback executing the triple option as anybody I have ever seen."

"We may not have been physically as good as Northwestern was, but I guarantee our heart was as big as anybody in the country."

In a key conference game in Fort Collins, Colorado State, a preseason favorite to win the WAC's Pacific Division if not the WAC championship as well, now faces a long, uphill climb to reach that goal.

The Rams opened their conference season in ignominious fashion Saturday night, bowing to Air Force 24-0 in Fort Collins.

The result, meanwhile, propelled Air Force into contending position. The unbeaten Falcons (4-0 overall) are 3-0 in WAC play just four games into the season.

"It's young in the season," AFA coach Fisher DeBerry said, "but I like where we are in the WAC."

Other league action saw Wyoming defeat San Jose State 30-10 in Laramie. Utah crush Texas-El Paso 56-3 in Salt Lake City and UNLV down Hawaii 25-15 in Las Vegas.

Despite the wins by BYU and Rice, the WAC went 3-5 in non-league games, dropping its season mark to 16-20.

AWAY: A BYU rugby player launches a play during last year's 18-1 season. BYU returns last year's team but will have to pass down their experience on the new players before the season starts in two weeks. BYU will begin the season against either Utah or Boise State.

BYU's national power rugby team looks to rebuild with young talent

MATT KARPOWITZ
Universe Sports Writer

BYU rugby team is ready to rebuild, and players and coaches are looking forward to another season.

Head coach Mark Ormsby, a former New Zealand, said the team will make cuts the last week of August. The coaching staff is looking to keep 25 to 30 players.

Still at the club level, the rugby team plays in the college division of the United States Rugby Union. The rugby team's schedule will be the first week of the season against either the University of Utah or Boise State.

The team's squad was successful last season with an 18-1 record. But, Ormsby expects this season to be a little different.

"It's a building year," Ormsby said. "A lot of experienced players are gone and there is an opportunity for new guys to really learn the game and get some experience."

Of the returning players also on the team is a chance to really see the game of rugby. Erik Ohlsson, who played last year, sees it as an opportunity to have some fun and play an exciting sport.

"We have some good returners and some good experienced players," Ormsby said. "But we can always use more guys that are ready to play the game." Ormsby is especially impressed

A lot of experienced players have gone on and there is an opportunity for new guys to really learn the game.

--Mark Ormsby
assistant coach

with the fitness level of this year's team. But he also knows some players might have their eyes opened when the season starts.

"A lot of the young, inexperienced guys are going to find out what the fitness level for competitive rugby is all about," Ormsby said.

One of the biggest struggles for the BYU rugby team is the playoff system used by the USRFU. Before 1984, the league had regional playoffs on a Friday-Saturday schedule. But in 1984, the league changed to a Saturday-Sunday schedule. BYU refuses to play on Sunday.

Ormsby says the change came when the USRFU allowed certain people to dictate circumstance. But Ormsby thinks the tide may be changing.

"Right now there is a rush for teams like BYU to play and to move back to the Friday-Saturday system," Ormsby said.

For now, BYU would like to go to the regional playoffs and sit out if it makes the Sunday schedule, hopefully pushing the league to change the schedule in the future. The playoffs are in the spring.

The players are hoping to attract more fans to support them this season.

"Come out and watch," Oh said. "It's always cool to have people out cheering for us."

The team practices at Helaman Field every Tuesday and Thursday from 4-6 p.m.

Men's golf team stroke under the weather storm drops Cougars near last place

MATTHEW PRIBYL
Universe Sports Writer

The men's golf team finished 10th in the annual William H. Tucker collegiate golf Tournament held at the University of New Mexico on Sunday.

The Cougars shot a one-under par 69 for eighth after weather delayed the completion of the first round for 54 holes. The threat of rain caused officials to cut the tournament to 36 holes.

Twelve teams from the Top 20 were competing for the title. However, the University of Texas at El Paso won the way after the first round of competition behind an eight-under 280. UTEP edged out No. 1 Georgia Tech and No. 6 New Mexico by a stroke.

At the end of the first day of individual competition, New Mexico's Zach Belle was atop the leader board with a five-under par 67. The Cougar was junior Matt Winkler, who shot a three-under par 69 to tie for sixth. Jesse Hibler, Jose Garrido and Andy Miller were three Cougars who found themselves in a log-jam at 41st, tied with 10 other golfers who shot an even-par 72 in the first round.

With gusting winds and rain, the second day of action saw BYU fight

"We got off to a sloppy start and played that way the rest of the day."

men's golf coach

ing to stay in the tourney. Unfortunately, the adverse weather conditions were too much as the Cougars dropped from eighth to 10th place, shooting a 300 for the tournament.

The Cougars tied with No. 5 Georgia Tech in the latest national collegiate golf rankings released by MasterCard. BYU head coach, Bruce Brockbank, gave his opinion of the team's performance.

"We were a little sloppy today," Brockbank said. "It was cold, rainy, and the winds were blowing anywhere from 10-30 mph. We also were not very mentally tough. We got off to a sloppy start and played that way the rest of the day."

Not all was discouraging for the Cougars, as sophomore Miller shot a one-under par 71 on the last day. Miller finished tied for 16th with a score of 143, six strokes short of co-champions La Belle of New Mexico and Edward Loar of Oklahoma State. Both finished with a seven-under par 137.

As for the other Cougars, Thurmand finished 27th with a 145, Garrido was 64th with a 150 and Hibler was 76th with a 151.

With the William H. Tucker Invitational now completed, the Cougars know they have room for improvement. They will now set their sights on the Nike Northwest Tournament in Oregon Oct. 6-7.

50 percent of BYU graduates owe for loans

TANYA SMITH
Universe Staff Writer

BYU students rank highly in repaying student loans, compared to other university and college students.

The rate of graduating BYU students who don't begin to pay off their student loans within six months of graduation is very low.

Graduate and undergraduate "students incur an average of just under $11,000 in loans," said Norm Finlinson, financial director at BYU. "That is probably a little lower than the national average, which is $13,000 for four years."

"A third of our undergraduates and graduates take out student loans, which is about 9,000 students," Finlinson said. "I expect that we have the lowest default rates in the country for an institution of our size. A preliminary estimate by our department is about 1.4 percent."

Finlinson said that the default rate for Utah State University is about 5 percent; for Weber State University, about 6 percent; and for the University of Utah, about 5 or 6 percent.

Julia Clayton, interim director of Financial Aid at the U of U, estimated that 35 percent or more of their students take out loans.

"As I see it, I think that BYU is doing exceptionally well at maintaining their debt default," she said.

Richard Effiong, financial aid director at Weber State University, said that about 41 percent of their students incur debt, with an average loan of $5,500.

At the U.S. News and World Report website, colleges and universities are ranked by Class of '96 Debt Load and average amount of debt per graduate. The website location is <http://www4.usnews.com/usnews/edu/home.htm>.

Utah State listed a total of $12,312 for average total indebtedness, with 67 percent of its graduates having student loans. The University of Southern California, a private university with approximately 30,000 students, listed their average indebtedness as $12,432, with 62 percent of their graduates having loans. The University of Notre Dame, also private, but much smaller than BYU, had an average indebtedness of $16,850, with 44 percent of its graduates having loans.

BYU's average indebtedness was listed at $10,344, which is a little higher than the New Jersey Institute of Technology's average amount of debt, the last school to make the Best Values list for National Universities. The site listed 50 percent of BYU graduates as in debt.

Finlinson said that BYU's debt load is low because The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints subsidizes tuition. "It's also the cost of living," Finlinson said.

Every five or six years the federal government reviews the higher education legislation, which was last revised in 1992, said Finlinson. Since the change in 1992, Pell Grants have become more scarce and have decreased in amount. Loan limits have increased, and the unsubsidized Stafford Loan was introduced.

"We are concerned as this government looks at expanding loan limits," said Finlinson. "It presents a real opportunity for our students to go into debt."

"Students are getting into debt and paying off loans," he said. "Because they are paying off loans, they are doing so at the expense of other things, such as buying a car, buying a house, and starting a family. The default rate is not an issue. It's what they could be doing, the things they could be doing better with their money."
